A significance of stalemate positions, besides the obvious, is the ability of a country to survive. In some of these examples, Germany can sustain existence in

Notwithstanding the orgiastics of an allegedly-notable player, good gaming demands knowledge of the stalemate positions. And a bedevilment of Diplomacy is the connivance in avoiding the traps to victory. But pity the player who has to win to be amused. Every position offers challenges, challenges everyone enjoys, unless they're fucked-up.

London:

It appears that high amount of aggression which has come from the country of Germany will soon be paid back. It was not the attack that annihilated my army when attacked be the German pig, but the smell of the foul odor from that direction. Also I would like to point out to the Bavarian ewine that the move Austria made from Budapest to Vienna is not just headed north for the cold weather. It would seem logical that soon history will repeat itself. The allies will rebound and crueh the German and Austrian expaneion. As for the ewell that exterminated my army, the very skilled British ecientists in the Royal Academy of Science have come up with a new gae mask which protects the Royal Armiee and Fleets from the foul ewell across the sea. Germany will eoon die because I have good allies.
